A 2018 Outlook: *is a turnaround possible in the US Milk Market?

Economist Daniel Basse will put his deep understanding of agricultural price trends to work for participants of this webinar. He'll apply his many years of experience in the commodity business to sort through production agriculture numbers, trends, and forecasts.

Wednesday, December 20

A DAIRY ECONOMIC FORECAST & UPCOMING TRENDS

Though the world dairy markets are in recovery, butterfat demand remains exceptionally strong in the US and globally. However, it's the powder prices that are capping US milk prices above $17.50/cwt. The question is, will EU powder exports slow? And will China step forward to allow US milk prices a bullish landscape? Dan Basse will lead participants through a discussion of how these markets will affect the US and the rest of the world.

The crop-growing season in the United States and around the globe has come to a close; we'll hear from Basse as he reviews the most recent growing season and how it impacted domestic and global supplies. He'll also sort through projections of what the year ahead holds for dairy producers in regards to forage, corn and protein prices.
